

COMMON MISCONCEPTIONS CONCERNING DAOISM (TAOISM)

Louis Komjathy 康思奇, Ph.D.

Assistant Professor of Chinese Religions and Comparative Religious Studies

Department of Theology and Religious Studies

University of San Diego

Popular misconceptions concerning Daoism are numerous and increasingly influential in the modern world. All of these perspectives fail to understand the religious tradition which is Daoism, a religious tradition that is complex, multifaceted, and rooted in Chinese culture. These misconceptions have their origins in traditional Confucian prejudices, European colonialism, and Christian missionary sensibilities, especially as expressed by late nineteenth-century Protestants. Most of these views are located in American designer hybrid (“New Age”) spirituality, Orientalism, Perennial Philosophy, and spiritual capitalism. They domesticate, sterilize and misrepresent Daoism. In their most developed expressions, they may best be understood as part of a new religious movement (NRM) called “Popular Western Taoism” (PWT), with Taoism pronounced with a hard “t” sound. The current state of Daoism in American may thus be compared to that of Zen Buddhism in the 1950s and 1960s (cf. Dharma Bums and Alan Watts with the Mountains and Rivers Order), although some have suggested that it more closely resembles the Euro-American understanding of Buddhism in the 1890s.

Popular Misconception	Informed View
Dao (Tao) is a trans-religious and universal name for the sacred, and there are “Dao-ists” (“Tao-ists”) who transcend the limitations of the Daoist religious tradition	道, romanized as dao or tao , is a Chinese character utilized by Daoists to identify that which they believe is sacred. There are specific, foundational Daoist views concerning the Dao, which originate in the earliest Daoist communities of the Warring States period (480-222 BCE).
Daoism consists of two forms, “philosophical Daoism” and “religious Daoism”*	The distinction between so-called “philosophical Daoism” and “religious Daoism” is a modern Western fiction, which reflects colonialist and missionary agendas and sensibilities. From its beginnings in the Warring States period (480-222 BCE), “Daoism” consisted of religious practitioners and communities. Considered as a whole, Daoism is a complex and diverse religious tradition. It consists of various adherents, communities and movements, which cannot be reduced to a simplistic bifurcation. Its complexity may be mapped in terms of historical periodization as well as models of practice and attainment

* These characterizations require reflection on the category of “religion,” including the ways in which Daoists have constructed and understood their own tradition.

“Philosophical Daoism” is the original form of Daoism and is best understood as “philosophy” (disembodied thinking/way of thought)	Outside of the modern world, there is no form of Daoism that is not “religious.” Although there are aspects of Daoism that are “philosophical,” “philosophical Daoism” fails to consider the centrality of embodied practice (way of being), community, and place in Daoism, especially in “classical Daoism.” It is based on a systematic mischaracterization of the inner cultivation lineages of Warring States Daoism and a misreading of the earliest Daoist texts, namely, the Laozi (Lao-tzu; a.k.a. Daode jing) and Zhuangzi (Chuang-tzu), among others
Daojia 道家 and daojiao 道教 correspond to the Western categories of “philosophical Daoism” and “religious Daoism,” respectively	Daojia 道家, literally “Family of the Dao,” and daojiao 道教, literally “Teachings of the Dao,” are indigenous Chinese categories with no correspondence to the Western constructs of “philosophical Daoism” and “religious Daoism.” Each term has a complex history, with its meaning changing in different contexts. For example, in the fifth century, daojia referred to the Daoist religious community in general and the Daoist priesthood in particular
Laozi 老子 (Lao-tzu; Master Lao/Old Master/Old Child) is the founder of Daoism	Laozi, a.k.a. Lao Dan 老聃 and Li Er 李耳, is a pseudo-historical figure. His received “biography,” as contained in Sima Qian’s 司馬遷 (ca. 145-86 BCE) Shiji 史記 (Records of the Historian), combines information about a variety of people from various sources. If Laozi existed, we do not know anything about him. There is, in turn, no “founder” of Daoism; “Laozi,” translatable as “venerable masters,” is best understood as a place-holder for the early inner cultivation lineages. Daoism, in turn, has multiple source-points. A variety of figures, both human and divine, are identified as important with respect to the formation of the Daoist tradition.
Laozi wrote the Daode jing 道德經 (Tao-te ching; Scripture on the Dao and Inner Power)	The Daode jing, a.k.a. Laozi 老子 (Book of Venerable Masters), is a composite text. It is a multi-vocal anthology that contains material from different early Daoist lineages and historical periods. Some of these historical and textual layers may have come from the oral teachings of the shadowy figure Lao Dan (see Zhuangzi, chs. 3, 5, 7, 11, 12, 13, 14, 21, 23, 25, 27, 33)

The Daode jing and Zhuangzi are the only Daoist texts that matter because they are the “essence” and “original teachings” of Daoism	There is no principal Daoist scripture. Although the Daode jing is probably the most central and influential scripture in Daoist history, different Daoist adherents, communities and movements revere different scriptures. The primary textual collection in the Daoist tradition is called the Daozang 道藏 (Daoist Canon). It is an open textual collection, with new additions having been made throughout Daoist history. The first version was compiled in the fifth century CE. The received version was compiled in the fifteenth century, with a seventeenth century supplement. It consists of roughly 1,400 texts, texts that come from every major period and movement of Daoist history.
Daoism began with a revelation from Laojun (Lord Lao) to Zhang Daoling in 142 CE. This was the beginning of the Tianshi (Celestial Masters) movement.	While the Tianshi movement was formative in the establishment of Daoism as an organized religious tradition and represents one of the most important movements in Daoist history, there were Daoist adherents and communities before the Celestial Masters. Moreover, not every subsequent Daoist movement recognized Zhang Daoling and the Celestial Masters as the source of their tradition.
Daoists, or Dao-ists, are those who love the Dao and go with the flow.	From a Daoist perspective, there are various types of religious adherence and affiliation. These involve different degrees of commitment and responsibility. The Daoist tradition consists, first and foremost, of ordained priests and monastics and lay supporters. Lineage and ordination are primary dimensions of Daoist identity and religious affiliation. This requires training under Daoist teachers and community elders with formal affiliation with the Daoist religious community and tradition. A distinction may in turn be may between Daoist adherents and Daoist sympathizers. In the case of Daoism in the West, one also finds various forms of spiritual appropriation and spiritual capitalism
Correlative cosmology, based on yin 陰-yang 陽, the Five Elements (wuxing 五行), and qi 氣 (ch'i), is Daoist.	These concepts are not Daoist. They are part of what is best understood as “traditional Chinese cosmology” and a “traditional Chinese worldview.” In pre-modern China, these concepts formed the foundation of a pan-Chinese worldview. Like other aspects of

	Chinese culture, they formed part of the foundational Daoist worldview. Thus, correlative cosmology is not Daoist in origin or essence
Chinese medicine is Daoist and/or there is some form of Chinese medicine called “Daoist medicine”	Chinese medicine is not Daoist. This misidentification, and the construct of “Daoist medicine,” most often comes from a conflation of correlative cosmology (see above) with Daoism. Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) is, in fact, a modern form of Chinese medicine created by the Chinese communist government and influenced by Western biomedicine and a scientific paradigm. In terms of classical Chinese medicine, there is some overlap between the two traditions, but little research has been done on this topic. We do know, however, that Daoists such as Ge Hong, Sun Simiao, and Tao Hongjing made major contributions to Chinese medicine. They were Daoists and, in the case of Sun and Tao, Chinese medical practitioners
Fengshui 風水 (lit., “Wind and Water), or Chinese geomancy, is Daoist	Fengshui is not Daoist. Like correlative cosmology, it is part of what is best understood as “traditional Chinese culture.” While some Daoists have utilized Fengshui throughout Chinese history, it is not Daoist in origin or essence. Using Fengshui thus does not indicate Daoist religious affiliation or identity.
Qigong 氣功 (Ch’i-kung; Qi Exercises) is Daoist	Qigong is not Daoist. Qigong refers to a modern Chinese health and longevity movement aimed at national upbuilding. It combines traditional Chinese health and longevity practices with modern Chinese concerns and a Western scientific paradigm. Some of these derive from earlier Daoist Yangsheng 養生 (Nourishing Life) practices. There are also many different types of Qigong, including Buddhist, Daoist, medical, and martial. Most Daoist Qigong incorporates internal alchemy (neidan 內丹) methods.
Sexual yoga, including the search for multiple orgasms and the practice of sexual vampirism, is Daoist.	The place of sexuality in Daoism is complex. Most of the practices identified as “Daoist sexual practices” originated in non-Daoist contexts, in imperial court circles in particular. While some Daoists have practiced “paired” or “partnered practice,” often referred to as “dual cultivation,” a different conception of sexual intercourse was involved. Moreover, such practices almost always occurred within a larger system of alchemical transformation in which the sublimation of sexual energy was a preliminary and foundational step.

Taiji quan 太極拳 (Tai-chi ch'üan; Yin-yang Boxing) is Daoist	Taiji quan is not Daoist. It is a Chinese martial art. Like Bagua zhang 八卦掌 (Eight Trigram Palm) and Xingyi quan 形意拳 (Form-Intent Boxing), it originated in non-Daoist circles. It was a nativist response aimed at national upbuilding. While some Daoists practice Taiji quan, practicing Taiji quan does not make one a Daoist. It is, first and foremost, a martial art that is not Daoist in origin or essence
Taoist Yoga, aka Flow Yoga or Yin Yoga, is Daoist.	“Taoist Yoga” is a misnomer, a mistaken category with no correlation to indigenous Chinese categories. Yoga is a Sanskrit technical term related to indigenous Indian practices aimed at union (yuj) with the divine. Most so-called “Taoist Yoga” is either modified Hatha Yoga or derives from Chinese Wushu 武術 (martial arts) practices. Current research suggests that little if any so-called “Taoist Yoga” derives from Daoist Daoyin 導引 (lit., “guided stretching”) or internal alchemy (neidan 內丹) practices, which are the indigenous Daoist categories.
Mount Wudang 武當 is the birthplace of the soft or internal martial arts, such as Taiji quan. Zhang Sanfeng, the patron saint of Mount Wudang, is the creator of Taiji quan	Chinese “internal style” (neijia 內家) martial arts are not Daoist and do not originate in a Daoist text. Current research indicates that Wudang style martial arts represent a modern synthesis of Bagua zhang, Taiji quan, and Xingyi quan. Zhang Sanfeng is pseudo-historical.
The Yiing 易經 (I-ching; Book of Changes) is a Daoist text. As the trigrams and hexagrams derive from it, they also are Daoist symbols	The Yiing 易經 (Book of Changes) is not a Daoist text. It pre-dates distinct, indigenous cultural traditions like Confucianism and Daoism. From a traditional Chinese perspective, it is one of the so-called “Five Classics” of classical Confucianism. Throughout Chinese history, some Daoists have studied the cosmology of the Yiing and utilized the trigrams and hexagrams as a symbol system, especially for external and internal alchemy. However, interest in the

	Yijing and hexagrams/trigrams does not make one a Daoist.
Translations of the Tao-te-ching by Stephen Mitchell, Ursula LeGuin, and other popularizers are accurate and provide direct access to the original teachings of Daoism	Such “translations” are not, in fact, translations. For example, Mitchell and LeGuin do not know classical Chinese. Moreover, such popular Western cultural productions are popular exactly because they expunge all of the culturally specific and religious dimensions of the text. Daoist scriptures (jing 經) are texts written in classical Chinese. Moreover, there are various Daoist views about the origin, nature and meaning of such texts.
Popular publications like The Tao of Pooh (Benjamin Hoff) as well as Change Your Thoughts and Living the Wisdom of the Tao (Wayne Dyer) provide accurate glimpses into Daoist beliefs and concerns.	Such works have no place in a serious inquiry into and an accurate understanding of the Daoism. They are part of popular Western culture, New Age spirituality, as well as self-help and pop psychology. They are part of “spiritual capitalism” and a new form of alternative spirituality best understood as “Popular Western Taoism” (PWT), with “Taoism” pronounced with a “t” sound. That movement has little to no connection with the religious tradition which is Daoism .

FURTHER READING

Belamide, Paulino. 2000. “Taoism and Healing in North America: The Healing Tao of Mantak Chia.” International Review of Chinese Religion and Philosophy 5: 245-89.

Bokenkamp, Stephen R. 2005. “Daoism: An Overview.” In Encyclopedia of Religion, edited by Lindsay Jones, volume 14, 2176-2192. New York and London: MacMillan.

Bradbury, Steve. 1992. “The American Conquest of Philosophical Taoism.” In Cornelia Moore and Lucy Lower (eds.), Translation East and West: A Cross-cultural Approach, 29-41. Honolulu: East-West Center.

Carrette, J., and Richard King. 2004. Selling Spirituality: The Silent Takeover of Religion. London and New York: Routledge.

Girardot, Norman. 2002. The Victorian Translation of China: James Legge’s Oriental Pilgrimage. Berkeley: University of California Press.

_____. 2008. “My Way: Teaching the Daode jing at the Beginning of a New Millennium.” In Gary DeAngelis and Warren Frisina (eds.), Teaching the Daode jing, 105-130. Oxford and New York: Oxford University Press.

- Clarke, J.J. 2000. The Tao of the West: Western Transformations of Taoist Thought. London and New York: Routledge.
- Graham, A.C. 1998 (1986). "The Origins of the Legend of Lao Tan." In Livia Kohn and Michael LaFargue (eds.), Lao-tzu and the Tao-te-ching, 23-40. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Hardy, Julia. 1998. "Influential Western Interpretations of the Tao-te-ching." In Livia Kohn and Michael LaFargue (eds.), Lao-tzu and the Tao-te-ching, 165-88. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Irwin, Lee. 2001. "Western Esotericism, Eastern Spirituality, and the Global Future." Esoterica III: 1-47. <<http://www.esoteric.msu.edu/VolumeIII/Dao.htm>>. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- _____. 2004. "Daoist Alchemy in the West: The Esoteric Paradigms." Esoterica VI: 31-51. <<http://www.esoteric.msu.edu/VolumeVI/Dao.htm>>. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- Iwamura, Jane. 2005. "The Oriental Monk in American Popular Culture." In Bruce Forbes and Jeffrey Mahan (eds.), Religion and Popular Culture in America, 25-43. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Kirkland, Russell. 1997a. "The Historical Contours of Taoism in China: Thoughts on Issues of Classification and Terminology." Journal of Chinese Religions 25: 57-82.
- _____. 1997c. "The Taoism of the Western Imagination and the Taoism of China: De-colonizing the Exotic Teachings of the East." <<http://kirkland.myweb.uga.edu/rk/pdf/pubs/pres/TENN97.pdf>>. Accessed July 1, 2007.
- _____. 1998. "Teaching Taoism in the 1990s." Teaching Theology and Religion 1.2: 121-29.
- _____. 2000. "Explaining Daoism: Realities, Cultural Constructs, and Emerging Perspectives." In Daoism Handbook, edited by Livia Kohn, xi-xviii. Leiden: Brill.
- _____. 2002. "The History of Taoism: A New Outline." Journal of Chinese Religions 30: 177-93.
- _____. 2004. Taoism: The Enduring Tradition. London and New York: Routledge.
- Kobayashi Masayoshi. 1995. "The Establishment of the Taoist Religion (Tao-chiao) and Its Structure." Acta Asiatica: Bulletin of the Institute of Eastern Culture 68: 19-36.
- Kohn, Livia, ed. 2000a. Daoism Handbook. Leiden: Brill.
- _____. 2001. Daoism and Chinese Culture. Cambridge, Mass.: Three Pines Press.
- Kohn, Livia, and Michael LaFargue, eds. 1998. Lao-tzu and the Tao-te-ching. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Kohn, Livia, and Harold Roth, eds. 2002. Daoist Identity: History, Lineage, and Ritual. Honolulu: University of Hawaii Press.
- Komjathy, Louis (Kang Siqu 康思奇). 2002. "Changing Perspectives on the Daoist Tradition." Religious Studies Review 28.4: 327-34.

- _____. 2003a. "Daoist Texts in Translation." <<http://www.daoistcenter.org/advanced.html>>. Posted on September 15, 2003. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- _____. 2003b. "Daoist Teachers in North America." <<http://www.daoistcenter.org/advanced.html>>. Posted on September 15, 2003. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- _____. 2003c. "Daoist Organizations in North America." <<http://www.daoistcenter.org/advanced.html>>. Posted on September 15, 2003. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- _____. 2004. "Tracing the Contours of Daoism in North America." Nova Religio 8.2 (November 2004): 5-27.
- _____. 2005. "Chronology of Daoist History." <<http://www.daoistcenter.org/basic.html>>. Posted on April 15, 2005. Accessed January 15, 2010.
- _____. 2006. "Qigong in America." In Daoist Body Cultivation, edited by Livia Kohn, 203-35. Cambridge, Mass.: Three Pines Press.
- _____. 2008 (2003). Handbooks for Daoist Practice. 10 vols. Hong Kong: Yuen Yuen Institute.
- Lau, Kimberly. 2000. New Age Capitalism: Making Money East of Eden. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press.
- Miller, James. 2003. Daoism: A Short Introduction. Oxford: Oneworld.
- Miller, James, and Elijah Siegler. 2007. "Of Alchemy and Authenticity: Teaching about Daoism Today." Teaching Theology and Religion 10.2: 101-8.
- Said, Edward W. 1979. Orientalism. New York: Vintage Books.
- Schipper, Kristofer. 2000. "Taoism: The Story of the Way." In Taoism and the Arts of China, edited by Stephen Little, 33-55. Chicago/Berkeley: Art Institute/University of California Press.
- Seager, Richard. 1999. Buddhism in America. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Siegler, Elijah. 2003. "The Dao of America: The History and Practice of American Daoism" Ph.D. diss., University of California, Santa Barbara, 2003.
- Sivin, Nathan. 1978. "On the Word 'Taoist' as a Source of Perplexity (With Special Reference to the Relation of Science and Religion in Traditional China)." History of Religions 17: 303-330.
- Strickmann, Michel. 2002 (posthumous). Chinese Magical Medicine. Edited by Bernard Faure. Stanford: Stanford University Press.
- Unschuld, Paul. 1985. Medicine in China: A History of Ideas. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Wile, Douglas. 1999. T'ai Chi's Ancestors: The Making of an Internal Martial Art. New City, NY: Sweet Ch'i Press.
- _____. 2007. "Taijiquan and Daoism: From Religion to Martial Art and Martial Art to Religion," Journal of Asian Martial Arts 16.4: 8-45.